The smallest bark on life's tumultuous ocean, Will leave a track behind for avermore;
The lightest wave of influence, set in motion,
Extends and widens to the et rual shore;
We should be wary, then, who go before
A myriad yet to be; and we should take
Our bearings earefully, where breakers rour and fearful tempests gather; one mistake
May wreck unnumbered barks that follow is our wake.

So with birds in the young Spring Make no delay to sing. For youth and song take wing and fly—how fast

For the mountain steeped in light, Intolerably bright, How changed they are at night— How dull and gray! For the roses blown in June, Like snatches of a tune They die syay

And if youth and song be dear,
And bird-notes trilling clear,
And Spring-time of the year,
And glad sunshine.
And the excelest, bright sum rose,
And mountains fair repese:
O dearer for than those
Is love divine!

Yet the splender of the morning. Its vanquished shadows scorning, And gone with scarce a warning. Like the dew-drops on the grass
It doth pass it doth pass !
It is but love, alss !
Yet love is sweet!

The following letter to a Congressional inflationist hits the nail on the head : "I see you are in favor of more money. I have a few dollars in my pocket that I should like to have inflated. I have also one debts that I should like to have contracted. the organism, to wide ranges of culture and liberal thought, to influence upon his fellow-men by pen and by voice, it is becoming in all young scholars to pause a most in their studies, and consider what education did for him, and what he did through his education, what manner of men and of mind it was that has passed away. Buch an one was the great man all will pay, with American scholars, fitting, reverence to the memory of Charles the city of Washington, in the house his pains and time had filled with choicest works of art, story above story, and with coatly and valuable books, breathed his last. The greatest scholar among our statesmen, the greatest statesman among our scholars, he was the Edmund Burke of our late American history, with more one hand, with more than Burke's influence upon the practical measures of his time upon the other. I knew him not only from the records and monuments of his public life, but also from the opportunities of a long personal friendship, and a familiar correspondence frank and hearty beyond that of any public man I ever so we yearn for our heavenly home, for the peace that a brounded in, we would fly to the mountain tops, but we find the way up is by little, alow, toiling steps, one after another.

Every kindly word and feeling, every good deed and thought, every noble action and impulse, is like the ark-sent dove, and returns from the troubled waters of life bearing a green elive branch to the woul.

Endeavor, if possible, to keep a clear conscience and two or three clean shirts. Risewith the lark but svoid larks in the evenings. Be above ground in all dwellings, and shove board in all your deslings. Love your neighbor as yourself but don't have too many in the same house with you.

I remind you this morning of a few points in which Charles Summer was a line of the sum of the recognite in which Charles Summer was a line of the sum of the peace of the sum of the troubled waters of life bearing a green elive branch to the woul.

Endeavor, if possible, to keep a clear future will link together two names, those of Lincoln and Sumner. Men who have most violently opposed, and perhaps maligned him above his grave will now recognite his historic and world-wide remove.

I remind you this morning of a few points in which Charles Summer was a summer was a sum of the sum of

I remind you this morning of a few points in which Cherles Summer was a model to young scholars.

He was a scholar in everything, every-where to the last. He impressed scholarship on everything that he touched. He never spoke or acted upon any public question the history and literature of which he had not fully explored, and many of his efforts are exhaustive treatises. He retained the habits of a student. He was stigmatized therefore by some as a mere scholar, a litterateur, a rhetorician, a political philosopher, a doctrinaire; but few meu who have been so long on the stage of public. action, have been so fortunate in inaugurating beneficent and successful public measures. He showed the value of the best and most laborious education of his time, (carried on from the Boston Latin School to the Senatatorship) in promoting the west of States

He sought—and in this too he was a model—the most elevated ideals of public life and character. In one of his first orations upon Fame and Glory, delivered as a young New England scholar before the Literary Societies of Amherst in 1847, he said: "Glory seems to have escaped the unpleasing personification of her sister, Fame. Glory, in its common acceptance, is a form or expression of public opinion. It is the judgment ditered by fallow mortals upon our tives or sota. It is the echo of their character and minds. Its value and significance are, of course, to be measured by the weight which is justly attached to this opinion. If the people from whom it proceeds are enlightened benevolent, and just, their favor may be a mark of true honor. If, on the other mark of true honor. If, on the other hand, they are ignorant, heartless, or unjust their praise must be an succrtain in-dex of real merit, varying always in ac-cordance with the elevation, the mediocri-ty, or the degradation of their intellectual and moral character."

The fortunes and historic standing of the man illustrate his youthful words. Listen, presently, and the world's echo to the news of his death shall witness it! But-some of his most obvious faults grew out Did you execute this instrument without fear or compulsion from your husband it blandly asked the judge, of a wife who had signed a deed. "Fear! Comwho had signed a deed. "Fear! Compulsion ! He compel me! You don't know ruptible man, incapable of swerving to his own advantage in the discharge of high trust; and who can estimate the value of Jones says he always makes up his mind the example to younger men, in days of regarding the value of a horse by the boundless corruption and flagrant selfishabundance, length and beauty of his tail, uses, of a Senator whom no lobbyist ever for it's a well-attested fact that "all's well dared approach with the suggestion of ind rection even, not to say of dishonesty? They made him faithful to the two grand principles he embraced at the outset of his career, Freedom and Peace, the binary stars that never set on the broad horizon of

The other day the Legislature of Massa chusetts expunged a censure passed upon him when he proposed in the Senate to remove from public view the trophies of our national triumph over the Great Repellion. It was said in anger then that he was inthe brave men who wen our victory, if not to the principles for which they fought, but it was simply however, ill-advised and unfortunate for the moment, an act of logical and moral consistency with his early and life-long devotion to Peace. So was his position touching our strife with England.

Mr. Summer was a model to young schol-ars in unfailing industry and devotion to his imbitual duties. As much by remark-The Evangelical Clergy of the Church of England do not seem to have heard, or, if they have heard, to appreciate the shrewdress and sit of Dr. John Ritchie's reply to one who disapproved of his going up and down the country and resorting to agitation. "Agitation!" said John, "what good in the world was ever done without signation! We cannot make but the office of Dr. Jackson, the chemist. "Dr. Jackson, the chemist. "Dr. Jackson, the chemist. "Br. Jackson, is presume?" said he did so; then, having looked behind the sofa, and satisfied himself that no one was "the Father of the United States Senate." Never out of his seat save when sickness compelled, and often it it under sore burdens of disability and acute suffering, if his voice, his hand, his vote were needed, nothing turned him aside from his duty. He has been ridiculted from the grand manner in which he semetimes avowed that he knew no guide but duty—and this is easy to do—but the fact is pre-eminently to his honor. All long as human rights or commanding public senses. "May I lock the door?" And he did so; then, having looked behind the sofa, and satisfied himself that no one was in the room, he placed a large bunder, done up in a yellow handkerchief, on the table, and opened it. "There, doctor, look at that!" "Well," said the doctor, "I see it." "Well," said the doctor, "I see it." "Well," said the doctor, "I see it." "What do you call that," "See was often an anomiortable obstacle in action. In minor matters he
